Igloolik

If I have a married son, his wife would be my ukuaq, (daughter in-law), and her parents I would call both of them nuliq, (in-law), and my daughter's child would be their iluliq, (grandchild). If our mothers were sisters you and I would call each other arnaqatik, (cousin's through mother's sister), but we'd be angutiqtigiik, (cousins through father's), if our fathers were brothers and if we were angutiqtigiik we'd call our children Qangiaq. If I have a brother his children and my children would be illukulugiit, (cousins through mother's brother or vice versa). If we are illuriik, (cousins through fathers) our children would call each other arnaqatik, (cousins through mothers female cousin), I'm not sure what our children's children would call each other. My father's brother is my akkak, (uncle through father), so your uncle's children would be my cousins and call them my angutiqtatik. You and I are illuriik, (cousins through mother's brother or vice versa), therefore your children are my nuaq and my children are your nuaq. Maybe my angutiqtatik's, (cousin through mothers brother or vice versa) children are my nuaq's? I call my late angutiqtatik's children my nuaq's. You and I are illukulugiik, (cousin's through mothers brother or vice versa), so our children are arnaqatigiit, (same as female sisters children call each other arnaqatik), but my angutiqtatik's, (cousin through mothers brother or vice versa), children I think are my nuaq's and my older sisters children are also my nuaq's... I call them my nuaq's but I might have the terminology wrong, I call my angutiqtatik's, (cousin through mothers brother or vice versa) children my nuaq's and I call my nuaq's children nuaq so I should call them my irngutaq's, (grandchildren) instead.

My daughters and their cousins call each other ujuruk so I think if any of them had children they would call their ujuruk's children irngutaq, (grandchild), that's how it goes. Since my children are your ujurut our children would be il-luriit. Your ujurut's child would be your irngutaq, so if your ujurut had any children you would also inherit an iluliq, (great grandchild). My older sister's children are my nuakuluk's and my brother's children are my anngak's. We never called our relatives by name, we'd call them by the kinship terminologies such as angakuluk, (brother's children), and nuakuluk, (sister's children). Kinship terminology was used even between people who weren't related to each other and using these terminologies was normal. These kinship terminologies; another example is my brother Noah who is doing this interview, his kids are my angak's, and I use these different kinship terminologies with each relative such as, I have an illuqtaa and her family, (cousin through father called with respect), I have a nuakuluk and her family, (nephew called with affection), and I have an angutiqatik and her family. We knew exactly who our relatives were, (although we never acknowledged relatives by name), and we knew how we were related just by using the kinship terminologies. We never used our names and it was normal for us to never use people's names. We knew who was who by using the kinship terminologies.

Qikiqtaqjuaq

I know some kinship terminologies but sharing and explaining terms such as aikulugit or airaapikulugit, (brother and sister in-laws called with affection), ukuariit, (sister in-laws), sakigiit, (in-laws), and ningaugiit, (father and son in-laws), would be a huge task because there's so many kinship terminologies. Nowadays only immediate family members use these terminologies and only the ones who know these terms use them because not everybody knows how their related to each other anymore, there's also no specific rules about using children they'll be my iluliq's but in the Natsilik dialect they'd be my amauq's. My irngutaq's child is my amauq and my amauq's child is my iluliq and my amauq's child is also my ajauppiaq. We from the Kivalliq and Natsilik Regions call our amauq's children iluliq and my iluliq's children are also my iluliq's. These are just some kinship terminologies that we use.

We had many kinship terminologies and we had to use these terminologies such as in the case of my akkak, (uncle through father), and his children. I had to acknowledge my akkak's, (uncle through father), children using kinship terminologies and they in turn had to acknowledge me using kinship terminologies because we're all related. I'm referring to Anirnilik my akkak, (uncle through father), who I call apkannaq and his younger brother I refer to as akkak and his wife I call aptak whom they have a son that I call illuq. Using these terminologies is a sign of great respect. My oldest brother, Angutinguuaq is actually my half-brother as we have different fathers and I call him angajunnua, (older brother called with affection) and I call his wife ainna, (sister-in-law called with affection), that's how we all refer to each other, using kinship terminologies and I grew up when us kids were taught these terminologies because we were forbidden to call anyone by name. I also have an older brother, Inuksak who I call angaju, (older brother) and he has a wife who I refer to as ai, (sister-in-law), and their oldest son is my qangiaq, (nephew through brother) but I don't call any of his younger siblings by kinship because they have a different mother. I call my older brothers children akkak. I call my akkak's, (uncle through father), wives attak using the Natsilik dialect. I'll mention my children and grandchildren, since my children are the irngutaq's, (grandchildren), of my mother and father my children's children are their amauq's.
